Order of authors and percentage of contribution: Participants voted to list our last names in the reverse alphabetical order as tribute to Wohlforth. Every participant contributed a short section on his/her own historical system while Wohlforth put together the introduction and conclusion. Participants then helped edit multiple versions. Wohlforth, Little, and Kaufman are the editors of the accompanying edited volume, The Balance of Power in World History. They made the most contribution to the entire project. They use my theoretical framework to organize 8 historical systems in the introductory chapter of the edited volume.

“Is History the Judge? Disputes Over Sino-Tibetan History”

Future Research Projects

“How Beijing Has Killed Hong Kong” (This book aims to integrate political science with my political activism and pay tribute to the three generations of pro-democracy activists from Martin Lee through Benny Tai to Joshua Wong.)

“We Chinese Have 5,000 Years of History!” (This project analyzes the uses and abuses of history in Chinese history textbooks and the popular media.)

“Hui and Wang China War Data Project” (I started compiling a dataset of all wars in Chinese history several years ago. The project has turned out to be far more unwieldy than I had expected. I eventually concluded that I could not possibly handle this immense project on my own and thus asked Yuan-kang Wang to join me. We envision a China war data project that is comparable to the Correlates of War project.)

“‘Give Me Liberty or Give Me Death’: Why Some Resistance Movements Resulted in Liberty While Others Resulted in Bloodbaths” (I have been teaching contentious politics for years and reflecting on the relative importance of structural forces versus agential strategies. This literature parallels my study of domination versus resistance in historical state-society relations.)

“Development, Constitutionalism, and the Two-Tiered World: Lessons from the West for the Rest” (I wrote a conference paper and presented the argument at various venues, but then set it aside for later.)

Organizer and/or Chair of Panels

Organizer of panel “China’s Peripheral Challenges,” ISAC-ISSS Notre Dame 2016, Notre Dame, November 4-6, 2016

Chair and organizer of panel “State-Making in Asia: Convergence and Divergence with World Trends in Theory and Practice,” American Political Science Association annual meeting, New Orleans, August 30-September 2, 2012.

Chair and organizer of panel “Should There Be National Schools of Thought in IR Theories? The Case of Chinese School,” American Political Science Association annual meeting, Boston, August 28-31, 2008.*

Chair and organizer of panel “Bringing Historical Asia to the Study of World Order,” International Studies Association annual meeting, San Francisco, Mar. 26-29, 2008.*

Chair and organizer of panel “Breaking down the Realist-Constructivist Divide: The Political Construction of Power Politics,” International Studies Association annual meeting, Honolulu, March 1-5, 2005.

*I organized these two panels and brought scholars from China to attend ISA and APSA for the first time. As the Chinese scholars involved were completely unfamiliar with the US academic culture, I rewrote all their abstracts and coached them through the submission and registration process. And as Chinese scholars received little or no funding from their own institutions to attend APSA/ISA, I also had to help them find funding sources.
